1.1. Traditional hills of Rome. A. Louis.

The ancient crossing of the Tiber, the Pons Sublicius (famously defended by Horatius), led the traveler from the west into the most ancient settled part of Rome, in fact a place older than Rome itself, the Forum Boarium, situated along the river between the Capitoline and the Aventine Hills. Its topography made it a natural place to meet and trade, although it may never have been a cattle market, as sometimes popularly supposed (bos = ox, cow, bull). Its ancient and crowded nature meant that it was constantly vulnerable to serious fires (see chapter 2). As a marketplace, the Forum Boarium was to be superseded by what would become the heart of the city, the Forum Romanum, which lay to the east of the Capitoline, framed by that hill as well as the Velia and the Palatine. That later forum presumably began as a simple market location, perhaps on the lower slopes of the Capitoline, and grew when the area it later occupied was drained by the great sewer (Cloaca Maxima), traditionally begun during the regal period.¹⁶

Rome Is Burning Nero and the Fire That Ended A Dynasty (Book) : Barrett, Anthony : "Nero became Emperor in A.D 54. On the evening of July 18, 64 A. D., it seems that a lamp was left unextinguished in a stall still heaped with piles of combustible material. Whether this was accidental or deliberate we cannot now determine, and normally it would not have led to anything that would have attracted ...

16. Rome Is Burning Nero and the Fire That Ended a Dynasty by

Professor Anthony Barrett gives turgid prose a bad name in Rome is Burning. In an extraordinary academic feat he manages to make Nero and the Great fire of Rome in 64 A.D. dull as dishwater. He prattles on for over 100 pages about where buildings might have been and whether they succumbed to the flames and what architectural style they might be.
